

Matthew Bruno

Matthew Bruno serves as the San Francisco Bay National Wildlife Refuge Complex Transportation Scholar for the 2013-2014 Public Lands Transportation Scholar Program. He served as a scholar during the previous year as well and will be continuing his work at the San Francisco Bay National Wildlife Refuge Complex providing ideas and guidance for improving alternative transportation. He enjoys bicycle touring and is always willing to take a longer route to visit an interesting place. Matthew graduated from the University of California, Los Angeles with a M.A. in Urban Planning and has experience working with multiple public transportation agencies in the San Francisco Bay Area. After this position, he hopes to continue working on issues of access and mobility in public transportation, cycling, and walking.
