

Todd Johnson

Todd is filling in for six months as public lands scholar at Chimney Rock National Monument (USFS) and the Canyons of the Ancients National Monument (BLM) in southwest Colorado. At Chimney Rock, context-sensitive road surfacing options are explored while at the Canyon of the Ancients work will be focused on looking into ways that regional public lands can be utilized through transportation to provide benefits to the economy and improve visitor experiences. In the past, Todd had worked for two years at Arches National Park as transportation scholar and spent three months a long time ago as transportation interpreter at Rocky Mountain National Park. He holds a B.S. and M.S. in Civil Engineering from U.C. Davis and Portland State University respectively.